Trained Nurse

Anastasie, with Auguste Simon, a trained nurse in the French Hospital, where Sister Anastasie lived, has thrown the Societe Francaise de Blenfaisance, at 220 and 322 West Thirty-fourth street, into a turmoil.

Auguste Simon came to America last March from France, where he had been a nurse in various hospitals. He obtained a place in the French Hospital in less than a month after his arrival. The hespital is a Roman Catholic institution, presided over by nine nums of the order known as Sisters Marianites of Hily Cross.

Sister Anasthasie, whose name before the entered holy orders was Rosalle Damourette, is a woman of twenty-two years, short, plump, and fair to look upon.

Simon's story, as he told it to an "Evening World" reporter to-day, through his counsel, Louis Mathot, is that Sister Anasthasic was not happy in her holy cailing. Simon discovered this, and one day she confided in him.

She asked Simon to write to her father in France, asking leave to quit the section of the father, Simon says, consending day, but they were to live as man and thired a room at 50 Sixth avenue, where he was joined the heat day by the Sister. She referred the reporter to President Thoron, at 23 South William street. Mr. Thoron denounced Simon as an impostor, who had betrayed the little nun. Lawyer Mathot says he will sift the matter to the bottom and get Justice for his client. He will, he says, proceed against the Sister Superior as soon as he can get the papers drawn.
